Despite my many misgivings on war I am not above being entertained by war-inspired. The siege of Tobruk was not technically a siege as the defenders were still able to move supplies and reinforcements into the city via the port. Following his success at Gazala and Tobruk, Rommel wanted to seize the moment and not allow 8th Army a chance to regroup. For several days, radio contact was lost with Cairo. Wow, is all I can say. Rundstedt had confided to Rommel that it was for propaganda purposes. Whitehouse wrote, "They called themselves the 'dirty dozen,' and took pride in the reputation they had of being the orneriest, meanest group of paratroopers who ever hit this base
