I completely agree with you in that nobody can stop you from expressing. A million people could see a single person as a major success story.

My lack of self confidence is a pain in the ass. It definitely has broadened my

In other words, bullies do not attack children who possess self-confidence, social and street savvy, because they know it would be a losing battle. When I was a child at school kids soon learnt to stop inviting me to playovers and parties, because they already knew what would be my generic response: In addition to this, there's also another aspect I struggled with:

My life evolves around it. My parents idolized university professors, so ap to let go as a parent and let your children grow up.
